

Appositives

Exercises 36-39 pp. 38-42

LESSON 11

An appositive renames its noun like a predicate nominative, but it is not linked to the noun by a linking verb; it is in apposition to it - positioned directly next to its noun. An appositive must agree with its noun in number and case--and its noun can be in any case! In English the appositive is set off by commas but in Latin an appositive may precede or follow its noun without commas. The appositive may be made up of more than one word, such as "Filius Dei". In such cases the additional words are in a case determined by their own function.

Day 1

Underline the noun and its appositive in both English and Latin and identify the case. Which sentence does not have an appositive?
